(a) receiving a plurality of communications, each having associated classification information;

The OnePlus Customer Service receives a plurality of communications, each having associated classification information.

For example, OnePlus Customer Service receives calls from multiple callers. For each call, a user provides information about the nature of the call by selecting the appropriate department from the given choices via keypad entry. The responses are used to classify the call.

(c) determining an optimum target for each communication based on the communication classification and target characteristics using a multivariate cost function comparing at least three potential targets; and

The OnePlus Customer Service determines an optimum target for each communication based on the communication classification and target characteristics using a multivariate cost function comparing at least three potential targets.

For example, OnePlus Customer Service analyses the caller selection to determine one or more skills that an agent who is selected to receive the call should have in order to provide the caller with the requested assistance. The system determines the potential agent based on the communication classification and performs automated skill-based routing of calls using Zendesk Omnichannel support (i.e., a multivariate cost function). OnePlus employs numerous agents, at least three of which possess the skill set required by the call.

OnePlus Chose Zendesk for its Global Omnichannel solution

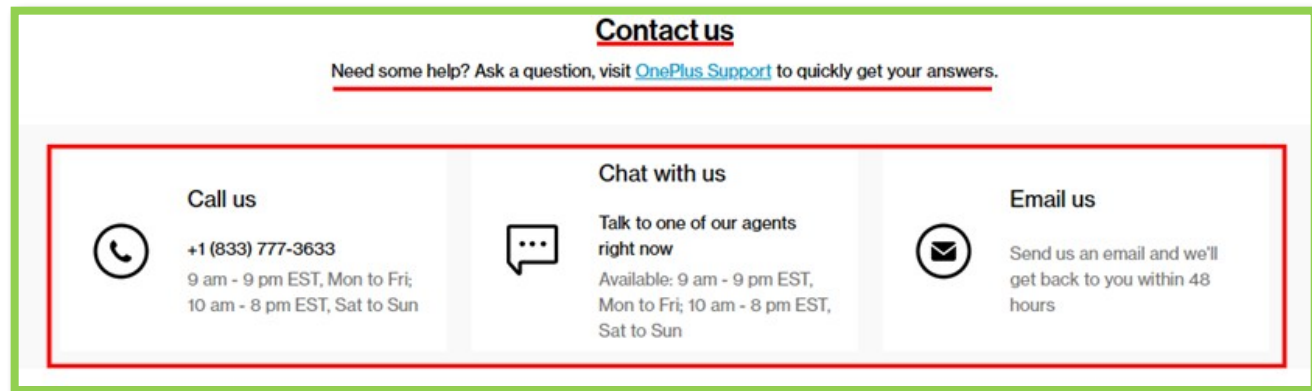

Providing omnichannel support through a central solution has helped OnePlus adhere to its first response times and maintain consistently high CSAT ratings. Additionally, the team has achieved a one-touch resolution rate of 86 per cent. Agents are empowered to go beyond simply answering questions over the phone and instead develop relationships with customers, sometimes to the degree that customers will call and ask specifically to speak with an agent they already know.
